

Embassy and Diplomatic Scholars Internship Program in Washington

The Institute for Experiential Learning (IEL) announces a new educational endeavor, the Embassy and Diplomatic Scholars internship program in Washington, DC. Students accepted for the Embassy and Diplomatic Scholars program will participate first hand in the operations of the diplomatic and international community in Washington. For example, in embassies they may do research, write press releases, and compose reports on congressional hearings and legislation; promote trade and foreign investment; or prepare for cultural events and high-level visits. In the Department of State they may research emergent international issues; write reports for senior officials; or follow the development of international-related legislation in the Congress and help prepare official testimony. Further, all interns will have an unequalled opportunity to improve their language skills as well as their cross-cultural communications ability. Students work four days a week and attend two academic seminars the fifth day, and most earn a full semester's academic credit for the experience. For more information, visit www.ielnet.org, or write to:

Institute for Experiential Learning
1901 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Suite 707
Washington, D.C. 20006