

Integrative Studies: Geography and Sustainable Planning Concentration.

After successfully completing this program, students will be able to:

1. Demonstrate an understanding of the impact of globalization on the environmental, economic, and social systems of communities around the world.
2. Demonstrate an understanding of indigenous knowledge system (IKS) in the management of resources of communities around the world.
3. Apply technical expertise of GIS and remote sensing in analyzing changes in the environment and site analysis.
4. Understanding natural and social scientific methods in predicting impacts of development on urban and rural environments.
5. Demonstrate an understanding of regional differences and similarities in physical, human, and geological processes.